

SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

In the wake of our nation's darkest hour, Canisius College would like to extend its deepest thoughts and prayers for the families, loved ones and friends of victims involved in the terrible tragedy on September 11, 2001. The college community shares in the overwhelming sorrow and sympathy felt by the rest of America. We mourn for the thousands who innocently lost their lives. We honor those who stared fear in the face with the will to find survivors. And we pray for the well-being of those whose lives were spared from the unimaginable events of that day — particularly all our Canisius alumni living and working in New York City and Washington, D.C. As the Canisius community endures this day in history with the rest of the nation, we will continue to pray that we remain safe and find hope in the lessons that teach us tolerance and understanding.

Canisius students gather for a candlelight vigil to reflect and pray for those involved in the tragic events of September 11.

The Canisius community comes together in Christ the King Chapel on September 14 in recognition of the National Day of Prayer and Remembrance.

Canisius faculty respond to the current crisis and host a campus forum on tolerance and understanding.
