The Department of Psychology at Canisius College is announcing an opening for a tenure-track Assistant Professor, beginning in the fall 2016 semester. Candidates should show a commitment to undergraduate teaching and an ongoing research program that can involve undergraduates. Teaching responsibilities, although flexible, could include introductory psychology, statistics, or research methods, as well as courses in the candidate’s area of interest. Although the specialty area is open, we are particularly seeking someone whose interests align with one of the following areas:

1. Social Neuroscience - Applicants with a concentration in the area of the neural bases of social psychological processes, broadly defined (e.g., social cognition, affective experience, and self-related processes).
2. Health / Behavioral Neuroscience - Applicants with a concentration in the field of behavioral medicine, the role of the brain in physical health, or other health-related areas.

Ph.D. by September 2016, ABD considered. College level teaching experience desired. Additional responsibilities include student advisement and a commitment to departmental and college-wide service.

Canisius College, founded 1870, is a Jesuit comprehensive liberal arts college with strong commitments to social justice and to preparing students to be reflective women and men for others. Department is especially enthusiastic about this mission and committed to faculty diversity. To learn more about the Psychology Department at Canisius College go to www.canisius.edu/canpsych/
