March 30, 2019 | “Horsing Around”

On Saturday March 30, a group of Canisius students learned how to ride horses. It was a scary, yet exciting adventure from riding horses to chasing chickens, trying to catch them. We also learned about the different animals that stay on Happy Tails Farm & Rescue Center such as goats, chickens, pigs and ponies. My favorite part of the trip was watching people chase after chickens and taking pictures riding the horses. I have never ridden a horse before and given the opportunity to do so was amazing. I highly recommend riding a horse once in your life even if you are scared. It is truly a life changing moment.

“What Doesn’t Kill You Makes You Blacker”

Among numerous public and private collegiate institutions there are very limited opportunities for students to be exposed to open, honest and constructive dialogue pertaining to race and how it functions within America. With welcoming Damon Young ’02 to Canisius to discuss his newly acclaimed book, “What Doesn’t Kill You Makes You Blacker,” he was able to honestly and humorously discuss his experiences of being a Black man within America while simultaneously expressing his outlook through these different stages within his life and the way in which it effected his world. With bringing Young to campus, the author’s conversation drew out very important points that were essential and noteworthy for all races to hear. With continuing the conversation and dialogue on campus, I will affirm as students that we examine our lives through race, class and privilege to better understand each other.

“The Taste”
Celebrating Asian American & Pacific Islander Heritage

As the tradition continued, this year ASC celebrated Asian American and Pacific Islander by inviting the college community to try new food and learn about different cultures. Held in ASC, Chartwells’ food was terrific. There were so many people coming in to enjoy cultural nourishment and share their thoughts. As this was a three-day gathering, ASC plans to continue The Taste--and more, in the upcoming years.

AAS Fashion Show 2019

The Afro American Society’s annual Fashion show was hosted on April 13, and was very eventful. Involving different shades and materials, the clothing looked fabulous on the wonderful models. You could tell the event was a success due to the teamwork and the harmony between everyone. The models were gorgeous and the singers were perfect, adding that little extra entertainment. As a bystander, I felt so included in the fashion show and look forward to many more.

My experience at Canisius was fantastic, and I would not change it for anything. When I attended Canisius, the school Motto was "Where Leaders are Made," and for me, that is what happened. After graduation, I stayed in Buffalo for six years of which four of those years I worked for the Buffalo Public School System, and in 2003, I moved to Maryland and obtained a Teaching job with Prince George's County Public School System where I am still working. Here is where I truly put into effect all of what Canisius had taught me. I have served as a Board member and Treasurer of the Local Teacher Association (Union). I started a committee once known as the Future Teachers Committee. I served as the Resolutions Committee Chair for the Maryland State Education Association and was their representative at the national level. I attest that the woman I have become as a leader, and as an educator, started with the excellent instruction I received from Canisius. As a teacher, I was often called upon to be a department chair, teacher in charge and a part of the Principal’s leadership team. I went on to obtain my Masters in Reading and a Certification in Administration. Five years ago, I advanced to a master teacher level where I was hired to be a Peer Assistance and Review Consulting Teacher. Two years later, I was promoted to my current job where I hire, recruit and staff Teachers. My title is Human Resources Staffing Partner. When I left the city of Buffalo, I promised myself that I would return, but I would return to recruit teachers from my alma mater; so far, I have made two trips doing just that. My advice to today's students is to study hard and keep track of your notes. The education that you receive from a Jesuit institution is priceless, and the relationships you make are equally the same. Today and forever, I am a GRIFFIN 4 Life--a LEADER "made" at Canisius!

Faithful and Distinguished Service

By way of the college’s Office of Human Resources, college members recently celebrated their tenure at this Jesuit/Catholic institution. Sababu Norris of ASC was recognized for 30 years of “Faithful and Distinguished Service.” Originally, from South Carolina, Sababu will always remember his first winter in Buffalo (1989); after trying three layers of thermals, he was ready to leave our City of Good Neighbors. Members of the college heard about this and introduced him to Dr. David Sheets of the Physics Department. Prof. Sheets and his family acquainted Sababu with cross-country skiing--and even gave him a set of skis—the rest is history! Planning to eventually transition to part-time endeavors in one of the Carolinas, Sababu will retire in June of 2020.
"The Hurt The Healing The Growth"
By: Clarise Simmons ’18

“The Hurt The Healing The Growth,” is a poetry book that speaks about my relationships and love experiences in college. The biggest relationship being the relationship I had with myself, following the relationship I have developed with others. It is an ode to love, to my love, and to the love, I have allowed myself to receive. In the process of writing the book, I went through many emotions, and it was a very heavy process. Often times I had to revisit those places I tried to keep tucked away in my past, some of which I have never confronted. Many times, I would ball my eyes out while writing, going right back to a space of hurt and pain. When I finished writing the book, I tossed it. It wasn’t right because I didn’t go deep enough. I still did not want to open those unhealed wounds completely and while taking a peek was painful I needed to tear the whole bandage off to feel all of the pain. I was left in a state of numbness but it’s that state that allowed me to feel those things I once buried way beneath the surface. It was at that moment that I realized it was time for me to rewrite the book again, this time holding nothing back. Every time I felt the memory of my love experiences creeping on I would write. No matter where I was or what I was doing I would stop and write and it resulted in this beautiful piece of literature I can now call my own. I wrote this book for my own specific healing, but more importantly, I wrote this book to remind people that it’s okay to feel, no matter what those feelings are. The ability to feel is the beauty of humanity. It’s important that we all have a basic understanding that no matter how we feel, those feelings are valid and should be treated with love and respect.

A poem from the book:

The Healing Process

No more faking it til I make it
I want confrontation with the woman looking back at me in the mirror
I’m sick and tired of her
Smile so wide so fake her jaw hurts as it shakes open fixing to ask someone how they
Are doing knowing she does not care
The healing process
Confronting all the hurt and all the pain she’s been through and not just from other people but from herself
The self-abuse she put me through
The audacity to walk around this corrupt earth not knowing her worth, not knowing her values, not knowing herself
She, just like many, bought into the fake it until you make it and has been faking it so much that there is no real left to make it
The healing process
I’m ready to get down to the ugly parts of her life
To the scars she thought were healed but are fresh
Some still bleeding
I’m ready to make her cry all that she can and then get her up off the ground
Dust her off
And start all over again
This time new
This time fresh
This time with love in her chest
The healing process

“I wrote this book to remind people that it’s okay to feel, no matter what those feelings are.”
